The Meeting of the Governors.

Whatever name may be formally adopted as befitting the scope of the annual meeting of the governors who shall assemble to compare views, the movement is likely to be important and the results encouraging. The first meeting was announced as a conference. "A house of governors" has been suggested, although in such connection the word "house" would imply legislative functions, which, of course, governors do not perform.

Uniformity in laws throughout the states would be generally desirable, and the governors might help toward this end. But uniformity in the spirit in which laws are lived up to is also essential, and here the influence and co-operation of governors would be effective. A wide range of topics has been suggested as proper to bring before a conference of the heads of the several states. Among these are marriage and divorce, the status of women, prison reform, election reform and special taxation. Extrajudicial matters of executive action and is all the more a subject for governors to consider, most all others being finally dependent upon legislative will. True, relief through federal legislation is often difficult and must come through state action.

The world and its people are assuredly growing better, not worse. If General Booth thinks otherwise it must be because he has been unable to keep abreast of human progress in his declining years.

But before congress can do much about the cost of living most of the congressmen will have to deliver some impassioned addresses to be read by the folks back home.

Well to do people have now so far recovered from the financial drain of the holidays as to be able to look high prices in the face and order a few of life's necessities.

As the courts have decided that no one should run away with Dr. Elliot's five foot bookshelf, it is evident that some misguided person has tried to.

If Aviator Paulhan is going to keep on climbing higher and higher he should take a bunch of notaries and expert witnesses along.

Naturally the stomach of the ultimate consumer fails to welcome with enthusiasm the idea of a food boycott.

Thanks are due the coal miners for holding up the demand for higher pay until the sun grows stronger.

Microbes.

Two thousand million microbes are sometimes injected into a person's blood to cure disease.

America and Manchuria.

The chief weakness of the advice coming from many quarters not to mix in the business of Japan in Manchuria is the fact that this country has mixed in. Nearly six years ago Secretary John Hay originated the United States policy of maintaining the integrity of China in the Russo-Japanese conflict within Chinese territory. The peace of Portsmouth was concluded with the approval of the United States, and that document seemed to explicitly bar Japan from the course in Manchuria which she has of late pursued and apparently intends to continue.

Like the planting of our flag, the setting up of our policy in the far east is the step that cost. It must stay to the fore until good and sufficient reasons exist for its withdrawal. All along the people of this country have taken pride in the worldwide tribute that "the United States is the only power which can look China in the face without blushing." To let Japan have her own way with railroads in Manchuria might be defensible diplomacy, but would look like abandonment of the integrity of China to its fate in a crisis as important as any raised by the recent war.

A goodly lot of uplifters, including the governors, still think that Washington is the place to launch a "safe and sane" boom.
